Introduction

Beijing, the capital of China is a vibrant, modern city with a strong culture and heritage. Beijing provides much for the visitor to experience and enjoy.

For the traveller, Beijing is a welcoming city offering a wide variety options. Combining the heritage of an ancient history with the excitement of a rapidly growing metropolis, Beijing has something for every mood or interest. Fans of culture can enjoy a performance of the classic Beijing Opera, a Kung Fu show, Beijing acrobatics, or a night at one of the city's many theatres or cinemas. Those looking for nightlife will enjoy the already large and constantly growing list of Beijing restaurants and bars.

From the Forbidden City to the Great Wall, Tiananmen Square to the bird's nest Olympic Stadium, there is an endless list of things to see in and around Beijing. In fact, there is so much to do that it is easy for the traveller to become overwhelmed. Fortunately, there are many opportunities to relax. Whether you sit in one of the many parks or temples, spend the afternoon over a pot of tea or indulge in a famous Beijing massage, there are just as many ways to do nothing in Beijing as there are activities.

Some of the main attractions are Tiananmen Square, the Forbidden City, the Great Wall, Beihai Park, the Summer Palace, the Temple of Heaven, Fragrant Hill, the Peking Man, the Big Bell Temple, the Ming Tombs, the Lugou Bridge and the Grand View Garden.

Beijing is a modern 21st century city preparing to show itself to the world at the 2008 Beijing Olympic Games. Skyscrapers, shopping malls and traffic contrast with the 'old' Beijing of teahouses, opera, local markets and street life.

Travellers looking for fine cuisine, vibrant nightlife, history, culture, or even relaxation will all find a place in Beijing. A city of change and tradition, Beijing is one of the most exciting places in the world. There is no reason to wait for this destination that should be ranked as a "must see" on every traveller's list.

Money

The Renminbi (RMB) is referred to as yuan (spoken as kuai) and issued as 100, 50, 10, 5, 2 and 1 notes. The yuan breaks down into 10 jiao which breaks down into 10 fen. Change can be hard to find so keep as many 10 yuan notes as possible. There are many ATMs around but not all accept overseas cards. The Bank of China ATMs work in English and are spread around Beijing. Credit cards are not universally accepted and some places might display the Visa symbol but only accept Chinese cards. It is best to have some cash in China and not be totally reliant on plastic means to pay for things.

Time

Beijing is two hours behind Australian Eastern Standard Time, eight hours ahead of Greenwich Mean Time, 16 hours ahead of US Pacific Time and 13 hours ahead of US Eastern Standard Time. This means that, if it 12 noon in Beijing, it is 2pm in Sydney; 4am in London; and 11pm the previous day in New York. Times change slightly due to daylight savings adjustments in some countries.

Telephone

Card phones are the cheapest way to phone for local and long distance calls and not all phone booths allow international calls. The mobile phone network is 900 and 1800 MHz. The country code for China is 86; the city code for Beijing is 010 and for Beijing local calls just dial the eight digit number. To make an international direct dial call from Beijing use the international access code "00". Local SIM cards are easily available and are offered as you arrive at Beijing International Airport.

China Post

The postal system is efficient. Use envelopes of an approved size.

Tipping

Tips are generally not expected and a service charge is normally added to restaurant bills. The main exceptions are hotel porters and tour guides who happily accept tips.

Climate

Located in the north of China at the northern end of the North China Plain, Beijing is ringed by mountains and enjoys warm, typically humid, summers. Winters tend to be cold and dry, with most of the city's annual precipitation falling in June and August. Occasional dust storms, blowing in from China's northern deserts, reach the city in late spring.

China Visas

All visitors need a visa which needs to be arranged before arrival. This can be obtained at a Chinese embassy or one of China's state travel agencies. The single entry tourist visa is valid for 30 days. Multiple entry visas, business visas and student visas are also available. Visa extensions are arranged by the Public Security Bureau (6525 5486).

Types of visa:
L - tourist visa normally valid for up to 30 days.
F - business visa normally valid for up to three months.
Z - work visa.
X - student visa.
C - flight attendant visa.
J - journalist visa.
D - resident visa.

Customs and Quarantine

A customs form must be completed on arrival. Prohibited items include fresh fruit, arms, ammunition, printed matter, films or tapes "detrimental to China's economy, culture and ethics", narcotic drugs, animals and plants. Cash over a stated value (US$6,000 or equivalent in foreign currencies, as at April 2008) must be declared. If you purchase antiques in China, you must obtain a certificate of authenticity to allow it to be exported.

Chinese Language - A Little Help

English can be a problem in Beijing. English will be spoken in all the main hotels, large restaurants and larger shops. Taxi drivers are not good at English and normal practice is to ask the hotel staff to write down your destination in Chinese. Do make sure you carry with you the hotel card in Chinese to return. Many restaurants have picture menus including the fast food outlets.

Mandarin (known as Putonghua) is the national language of China. Cantonese is spoken in Guangdong, and Hakka is used in north-eastern Guangdong. Chinese uses tones and incorrect tones change meanings of words.

Electricity

The voltage is 220V. Numerous plug types are used: the two-pronged styles and the three-pronged, angled Australian styles are common. An adapter with American and Australian styles will cover most places.
Office Hours
Offices in Beijing normally operate from 8am to 5pm and close for lunch.

Internet
Most hotels have Internet and Internet cafes are easily found.

Newspapers
The China Daily is produced on all days except Sunday and the Beijing Weekend on Friday has useful visitor information.

Orientation
Beijing is the second largest city in China, after Shanghai, and is the political and cultural capital of the country. Beijing covers an area of almost 17,000 square kilometres and has a population of nearly 18 million people. Traditionally called Peking in English, Beijing's population is comprised of all of China's many ethnic groups as well as a large international population.

Beijing is made up of 16 urban districts and two rural counties. The inner city is square in shape with the outer city being a rectangle and the Forbidden City in the centre. Central Beijing is made up of wide tree-lined boulevards and highways with little alleyways (or hutongs) running off various courtyards. Parks and gardens are spread around the city.

Tiananmen Square and the Forbidden City form the centre of the city. During the 'Imperial China' period, this area was thought to be the centre of the Chinese Empire and, by default, the universe. From this centre, a series of five concentric highways, or ring roads, move out towards the perimeter. An extensive transportation system consisting of trains, buses and taxis cover the entire metropolitan area and provide connections to outlying areas like the Great Wall and Ming Tombs.

Beijing's subway system currently features five lines, with most of the city serviced only by the crowded and sometimes complicated bus system. A large number of taxis service the entire city and usually charge two yuan, about US$0.30, per kilometre.

A major transportation hub for all of China, Beijing also features connections via train, bus and aeroplane to almost all other cities in China. Beijing also serves as the major entrance point for travellers entering China from abroad.

The centre of Beijing is built around a grid pattern and divided into seven main sections. Fengtai District and Xuanwu District make up the city's southwest, home of the Beijing South train station. In the southeast, Chongwen District is home to the iconic Temple of Heaven Park and the lively Beijing Dirt Market as well as two famous Beijing restaurants, known for their roast duck, Quanjude and Bianyifang.

In the northeast of Beijing is Chaoyang District. This area is home to much of the Beijing nightlife, particularly in the Sanlitun and Worker's Stadium areas. Much of Beijing's foreign population, embassies and the Olympic park can be found in this area. The Beijing airport and the popular Silk Market can also be found in Chaoyang District.

To the west of Chaoyang District is Dongcheng District. Wangfujing street, a famous pedestrian shopping street and the central Beijing train station can be found here. The Forbidden City, Tiananmen Square and Zhongshan Park are also located within Dongcheng District.

West of Dongcheng District is Xichang District, home of the Xidan Commercial Area, a good place for up-scale shopping. Beihai Park and the second largest Beijing bars area, Houhai Park, are also located within Xichang District.

Finally, in the northwest of Beijing is Haidian District, home of the Summer Palace and many of Beijing's universities.

The Great Wall of China is located on the edge of the greater Beijing municipality limit, to the north of the city centre. To the southwest is the Marco Polo Bridge and to the southeast is the coastal city of Tianjin.

Culture
Beijing is commonly considered the centre of Chinese culture. It is home to many museums, theatres, architectural monuments and universities. Beijing has its own linguistic dialect, characterised by the addition of a harsh "r" sound at the end of many words. This dialect has been adopted as the standard form of Mandarin in China.

Beijing is known for its Siheyuan architectural style which predominates the city's hutongs, or alleyways, neighbourhoods. These typically single-story homes are built around courtyards and often communal hallways and bathrooms. This style of housing produces a vibrant street life in the neighbourhoods and is characteristic of Beijing's old city.

The Beijing Opera is considered by many to be the highest achievement of Chinese cultural development. Beijing Opera combines song and dialog with stylised and symbolic gestures and movements. The operas use a special dialect that can be very difficult to understand. Fortunately, most popular theatres in Beijing display subtitles in both English and standard Mandarin.

The cuisine in Beijing has been influenced by cooking techniques from all over China. However, some Beijing restaurants do feature some dishes that are unique or characteristic of the city. The most famous is the Beijing roast duck, more commonly known as Peking Duck. Imperial cuisine, the food specially developed for China's emperors, is also unique to Beijing and can be found at many specialised Beijing restaurants.

Beijing is also the centre of the Chinese art scene. There are dozens of galleries exhibiting the work of modern and contemporary Chinese artists. There are also many museums dedicated to various forms of traditional art including painting, sculpture, ceramics and crafts. The National Art Museum is located on the east side of Tiananmen Square.

Famous traditional crafts of Beijing include cloisonné metalworking, Beijing lacquer-ware, combs hand-carved from bone, and carvings of traditional scenes on a rice-grain-sized piece of ivory. Beijing is also known for its silk flowers which appear on hair clips as well as in wreaths and bouquets.

History in a Nutshell
Beijing history and its 34 emperors can be traced back 500,000 years thanks to the discovery of 'Peking Man' in 1929 at Zhoukoudian.

The first human settlements were about 3000 BC and originally called Ji, later Yan. In 1153 Beijing became the capital of the Jin Dynasty which ruled from 1115 to 1234. Beijing was called Zhong Du at that time but little remains to be seen as Zhong Du was burnt to the ground by the armies of Genghis Khan in 1215. Kublai Khan crowned himself emperor in 1260 and founded the Yuan dynasty in 1271.

In 1368 Zhu Yuanzhang overthrew the Yuan dynasty and started the Ming dynasty. The city was renamed Beijing. He died in 1398 and his fourth son, Emperor Yongle, took over and he named the capital Beijing meaning Northern Capital. He built the Forbidden
Palace, Bell Tower and Temple of Heaven and much the city layout that still survives today. The royal cemetery, the Mong Tombs, were also built at that time.

In 1664 the Manchus conquered Beijing and kept the Ming administrative and remained in power until 1911. The Qing built the Old Summer Palace and many of the gardens we see today. In 1912 the Republic of China was founded by Sun Yat-sen.

In 1928 the capital was moved away from Beijing to Nanjing. Mao Zedong was a founder member of the Chinese Communist Party in 1921. In 1937 the Japanese occupied the city after defeating the Chinese troops at the Marco Polo Bridge. The end of World War II was followed by civil war won by the Communist Party. On 31 January, 1949 the People's Liberation Army entered the city and, in Tiananmen Square on 1st October 1949, Mao Zedong proclaimed the founding of the People's Republic of China.

In 1964 the old city walls were taken down to construct the Second Ring Road. Tiananmen Square was expanded and the Great Hall of the People and the National Museum constructed (originally called the Chinese History and Revolution Museum).

A series of economic reforms put in place in 1978 by Deng Xiaoping started an ongoing process of development. A boost was the 1990 Asian Games and the 50th anniversary of the Republic of China in 1999.

Beijing's successful bid for the 2008 Olympic Games has continued the process of major development and a focus on the environmental issues facing Beijing. On 12 January 2005 the State Council approved the Beijing Urban Development Plan (2004-2020) where Beijing is to be developed into a “modern metropolis, capital of culture and a pleasing city” and home to almost 18 million people. The city is to develop a multi – polar polycentric plan with modern satellite cities to reduce the traffic problems in the city centre.

With all the transformation, development and major infrastructure, Beijing is changing fast. An area in the centre of the city has been preserved and the original hutongs and buildings will be restored.

Facts and Figures

Environment

Beijing has just over 7,000 square kilometres of green areas. Air pollution is a problem that is being addressed. In 2004 there were 229 days in which air quality was fair or good. To help the problem 20,000 taxis failing to meet the European 111 Emission standards are to be replaced with environmentally friendly vehicles.

Government

The People's Government of the Beijing Municipality is the executive body of the Beijing Municipal People's Congress and the main administrative body. It functions under the State Council. The Beijing Municipal Government has a mayor, several deputy mayors, a secretary–general and directors of different municipal commissions, offices and bureaux.

Getting About

Beijing Airport

Located on the north-eastern side of Beijing's central district, the Beijing Capital International Airport (phone 6512 8931) is about 26 kilometres from the city centre. The airport opened in 1999 and is a modern efficient airport. Free baggage carts are available and the airport has lockers for passengers to store their baggage. Beijing Capital International Airport has a host of facilities for the world traveller, including money changers, ATM machines and a host of restaurants.

Its three terminals are designated as follows: Terminal 1 for Hainan Airlines; Terminal 2 for Skyteam, China Eastern Airlines and China Southern Airlines; and Terminal 3 for Star Alliance, Shanghai Airlines, Air China and Oneworld.

Terminal 3 began operations only in March 2008. It is widely regarded as the largest airport building in the world and is expected to provide much-needed support to what is already the busiest airport in the country, and just in time for the Beijing Olympics. According to estimates, the airport will have the capacity to handle 90 million passengers a year by 2012.

It is strongly recommended that you DO NOT USE any of the people soliciting taxis and transfers; only use a pre-booked transfer, public taxi or airport bus.

Pre-booked Airport Transfers

An easy option is to pre-book, before you go, a transfer from the airport to the hotel. An English speaking guide from Gray Line Blue Diamond will meet you and escort you to your hotel. This beats the long taxi queues and drivers who rarely speak English.

Airport Bus

Tourists may also take the airport shuttle to the city centre, which is the cheapest means of travel available, costing around ¥16. The airport bus is available on the lower level just outside the arrivals area that departs every 15 to 30 minutes. There are four main bus lines servicing various locations.

- Line 1 heads south-east to Fangzhuang and operates from 7.30 am to 10.30 pm. Stops include Baijiazhuang, Dabeiyao, Fangzhuang, Panjiayuan, Liangmoqiao and Shilihe.
- Line 2 heads south-west to Xidan and operates from 7 am until the time of the last available flight. Stops include Xidan, Sanyuanqiao, Dongsishitiao Bridge and Dongzhimen.
- Line 3 heads to the city centre and other southeast locations. It operates from 7.30 am until the time of the last available flight. Stops include the Beijing Railway Station, Chaoyangmen, Yuyang Hotel and Yaoboulu.

Line 4 heads to north-west of the city to Gongzhufen and operates from 7 am to 11.00 pm. Stops include Beitaipingzhuan, Gozhufen, the Beijing TV Station, Friendship Hotel and five bridges: Anzhen Bridge, Hangtian Bridge, Jimen Bridge, Madian Bridge and Zizhu Bridge.

Line 5 heads north of the city to Zhongguancun and operates from 8.30 am to 9.30 pm. Stops include Wangjing, the Asian Games Village, Baofusi Qiao, Xiayiing and Xueyuan Bridge.

Taxis
Tourists usually take taxis to head to the city centre. Fares cost between ¥70-120. Depending on your time of arrival, you may have to brace yourself for some massive traffic jams en route to the city centre.

Taxis are available from the lower level of the airport. Do not use drivers who approach you and only use the taxi line outside the terminal. Your taxi information will be recorded in case of any problems. Make sure that the driver puts the meter on. The taxi driver will provide a printed receipt and also a second receipt for the toll road which must also be paid. There is no need to tip taxi drivers. Carry the name of your hotel in Chinese as drivers rarely speak English.

Limousines
There are several limousine companies for private hire. ASM Chauffeur Services (8463 4451) and Beijing Limo (6546 1688).

Car Rental
There are a number of international and local car hire companies in Beijing that rent out cars. Our Beijing eGuide.com partner, Holiday Autos, offer a lowest rate guarantee and cars can be booked in Beijing.

Bus
The bus system services the entire city. Unfortunately, virtually all signs and maps are written in Chinese and the drivers hardly speak any English. On the bright side, there are a handful of lines that call out each stop in English. If you remain undaunted, taking the bus can lead you to anywhere you want to go in Beijing and, certainly, to a lot of pleasantly surprising places where you did not want to go!

Beijing buses are impressive and so many of them are brand new, specifically to meet the high demand for transportation during the Beijing Olympics. Most buses are fully air-conditioned (but heated in winter), have their own television sets and a scrolling screen that flashes upcoming stops in Chinese. For help using the bus system, tourists can call 96166, the number for the Beijing Public Transportation Customer Helpline.

The buses may be difficult for visitors to use as no English information is provided, but they are cheap and people will help you. All bus lines have their designated routes indicated by number, running from 1 to 999. Those below 300 cater to the city centre: buses numbered between 1 and 100 operate within the Third Ring Road; between 200 - 212 are night buses. Those from 300 and above travel from the city centre to the suburbs. Those starting from 900 and above service the city's rural outskirts.

Bus passes are available and easily bought at McDonald’s.

Subway
It is easy for foreign tourists to get around Beijing using the subway. Each subway station has signs in English and easy-to-understand maps.

As of October 2007, Beijing has five operational subway lines:

Line 1 - Stretching from Pingguoyuan in Western Beijing to Sihui in the East, this line has 21 stops including Dongdan, Xidan, Yonganli, Guomao, Wangfujing and Tiananmen. It is identified as the red line.

Line 2 - Known as The Loop, this line covers the Second Ring Road and Qianmen Avenue in Northern Beijing. It is identified as the blue line.

Line 5 - This line began operations in October 2007 and is the city’s first line running from north to south. One of its most popular stops is the Temple of Heaven. It is identified as the purple line.

Line 13 - This line extends further north than Line 2 and runs from Dongzhimen to Xizhimen. It is identified as the orange-yellow line.

Batong Line -- Also known as Line 8T, this line travels east, from Tuqiao to Sihui. Foreign tourists rarely use this line. It is identified as the red line.

In addition, Beijing is presently building seven more subway lines, which will be operational in time for the 2008 Beijing Olympics. Tickets are priced depending on the distance you will travel. You can also obtain a pre-paid subway card for ¥20.

Look for the “Tickets” sign. After buying your ticket proceed down the stairs to the platforms where you present your ticket. Just follow the subway map to your destination.

Coaches
From Beijing to Shanghai is 1461km and from Beijing to Nanjing is 1139km. There are many coach operators which are a good way to reach the cities closer to Beijing.
Bicycle

Cars have now overtaken bicycles as the main means of transportation in Beijing. Nonetheless, you will still see more bicycles in the city than you will find anywhere else.

Cycling is an excellent way to explore the city and is encouraged by local authorities. Virtually every major thoroughfare in Beijing has its own bicycle lane. Given the typical Beijing traffic and its overcrowded streets, a bicycle may even take you to your destination faster than any car or bus.

There are many places where you can rent a bike in Beijing including hotels and some hostels. Other bicycle hire shops are easily found. There is also a popular bicycle touring company called Bicycle Kingdom Rentals and Tours which provides its own tour guide. Bike rentals are available on an hourly basis.

It takes just over an hour to cycle from Tiananmen Square to the Summer Palace.

Train

The major routes to Beijing are from Guangzhou, Shanghai, Harbin, Chengdu and Urumqi. There are four train stations.

- Beijing Station at Beijing Zhan Jie. Phone 5182 1114.
- Beijing West Station at Lian huachi Donglu. Phone 5182 6253.
- Beijing North Station at Xizhimen, Xicheng District. Phone 5186 6223.
- Beijing South Station in Chingwen District. Phone 8310 9031.

Xian to Beijing takes about 10 hours; Shanghai to Beijing takes about 12 hours; Haerbin to Beijing takes about 20 hours and Guangzhou to Beijing takes about 30 hours.

Restaurants

Beijing restaurants reflect the long tradition of culinary diversity that has made Beijing a unique and exciting place to eat. As the long-time capital of China, flavours and traditions from all over the country, as well as the world, have migrated to the city. This wide variety of options and a dedication to quality that dates back to preparing food for emperors, makes eating in Beijing a special experience.

Restaurants vary from street stand, to family operations to internationally recognised. Most local restaurants have menus with pictures which makes it easy to choose.

Though influenced by many different cuisines, Beijing has several characteristic dishes. The most famous is the roast duck, more commonly known as Peking Duck. Served with hoisin sauce and leeks then rolled in a pancake, Peking Duck is a must have treat for visitors to Beijing. There are several restaurants that make Peking Duck their specialty and offer an excellent experience to diners.

Beijing is also famous for its on-the-street food stalls. These vendors sell everything from snacks to dumplings, noodles to fried rice. Some even sell such exotic things as scorpions and silk worm larvae, both delicacies in some parts of China. The best place to sample Beijing's street food, from the mundane to the wild, is at the food market directly off of the famous Wanfujing pedestrian shopping street.

A third type of food special to Beijing is imperial cuisine. These restaurants specialise in preparing food as it was for the emperors of China. The emphasis is on the quality of ingredients and the presentation of meticulously prepared dishes. Usually a meal will consist of a dozen or more small courses. There are several restaurants that cater to this ancient style.

The importation of flavours and cooking styles has not stopped. Whether you want food from across China or imports from South East Asia or Europe, there is a restaurant that will cater to your taste.

Architecture, Buildings and Places of Historical Significance

Beijing contrasts ancient buildings with modern. The CBD is one area that is being transformed around Guoma and will create a significant urban space to equal Lower Manhattan or Central in Hong Kong. New futurist buildings are springing up all over the city and by 2008 Beijing will have been transformed.

Hutongs

A hutong is a small street or laneway formed by a passageway being left between courtyards enabling more convenient passage. They often contain shared facilities, such as cooking and washing places, for the local residents. A Mongolian word meaning ‘water well’, around which people lived, hutongs have their own structured layout between courtyards, gardens and rockeries. There are numerous hutongs and courtyards in Beijing which, seen from above, appear as well-ordered as a chess board. Hutongs also define the neighbourly culture of Beijing’s citizens. Many have now gone as Beijing modernises but examples can be seen at Di’anmen Avenue near the Gulou Tower.

Niujie Mosque

To the southwest of outer Beijing city is the Niujie Mosque built in 996 during the Liao Dynasty. The Niujie Mosque blends the style of Chinese palaces with Arabian mosques. The mosque is built of timber with a central Prayer Hall (Kiln Hall) and the stone tablets inside were laid in 1496. Outside are two steel pavilions to the north and south.

Prince Gong’s Mansion

Heshen built this mansion in 1777 during the Qianlong period. The compound shows how nobles lived at this time. Prince Gong was the younger brother of the Xianfeng emperor. In the complex is a large lily pond and rock garden. Located at 14A Luyin Jie, Xicheng District. Phone 6616 8149.

CCTV Tower

The tallest structure in Beijing is the CCTV (China Central Television) Tower at a height of 405 metres to the tip of its antenna. Built in 1992 the tower hosts CCTV broadcasting equipment. There is an observation deck and restaurant at 238 metres which provide 360 degree views over the city. An annual race is held to the top to the tower which entails two laps of the base then a climb up the 1484 steps to the observation deck.

Located in Beijing’s western suburbs (Haidian District), the tower is near the Gong Zhu Fen station and Yuyuantan Park.

Forbidden City

The Forbidden City (the Palace Museum) has been the residence of 24 emperors. The Forbidden City covers 170 acres and about 9,000 rooms rich in antiques, clocks and jewels. It was built during the period 1406 to 1420 and is located a kilometre north Tiananmen Square. It is believed that around 1,000,000 workers were used to construct the Forbidden City. The last emperor to live in the city was Puyi who left in 1924. The southern section of the Forbidden City contained the official area and the northern section, or the Inner Court, was the living area. A wide deep moat and a 10 metre high wall surround the city as a rectangle with four corner towers.

As you enter the city you pass under the Gate of Supreme Harmony and then into a large courtyard. On the north of the courtyard is the Hall of Supreme Harmony. The second ceremonial hall you then pass through is the Hall of Middle harmony. Then comes the Hall of Preserving Harmony next to a Starbucks! From here you can explore the Hall of Jewellery, Inner Palace, and Imperial Garden and to the exit via the North Gate.

It normally takes about three hours to explore the Forbidden City and an English audio tour narrated by Roger Moore is available. The main entry point is the Meridian Gate which is 10 minutes walk north of Tiananmen Square. This is the same gate as the Gate of Heavenly Peace.

Located at Jingshanqian Jie, Dongcheng District. Phone 6513 2255.

Great Wall

The Great Wall at one time stretched 6,500 kilometres (4,000 miles) across the border between China and the Hun territories in the north. It started as a series of earthworks and was connected in the Qin dynasty (221 to 206 BC) with each dynasty adding to the height, width, length of the Great Wall. During the Ming dynasty (1368 to 1644), the watch towers were redesigned, the brick and granite reworked and cannons added. After this period parts of the Wall were dismantled to provide building materials. Armies were garrisoned along the length of the Wall to provide a warning of invasions and signal fires were used to tell the next tower where an invasion was about to happen. The Wall extends along the mountain ranges to gain height and provide views.

The three sections of the Great Wall near Beijing are the Badaling, Mutianyu and Simatai sections. You may choose to hire a car and driver for the day or take an organised tour.

Badaling Section

The Badaling section is 70 km from Beijing and the closest to the city. It is close to the Ming Tombs. There is a chairlift, fast food restaurants and easy to walk along the wall from here. Located at Yanqín.
Mutianyu Section

Mutianyu is 90 km north of Beijing and another popular place to visit. There is a steep climb from the main gate but there is a chairlift to make it easy. A good place for views across the ridges and down the valleys. Located at Huairou County. Phone 6162 6873.

Simatai Section

The Simatai section is about 120 kilometres north east of Beijing city centre. It is 5.4 kilometres long with 35 watchtowers, 20 of which, to the west, are well preserved. This section of the Wall is one of the most spectacular for scenic beauty.

Marco Polo Bridge

The Marco Polo Bridge, 15km southwest of Beijing, crosses the Yongding River. The original bridge was constructed in 1192 and reconstructed in 1698. The bridge is 266.5 metres in length and 9.3 metres wide with 281 pillars each with a lion on top lying in a different posture. At the end of the bridge are four columns. The Marco Polo Bridge marks the start of the War of Resistance in July 1937 against the Imperial Japanese Army.

Ming Tombs

All but one of the Ming emperors is buried at the 13 Ming Tombs which are found 50 kilometres to the northwest of Beijing. Only the Dingling Tomb and Changling Tombs are open to the public. Changling is well preserved. The Lingxi Palace is made of camphorwood with a painted ceiling.

Dingling is underground and is the mausoleum of Emperor Zhu Yijun. The main things to see are the Stone Bridge, Soul Tower, Baopeng and Underground Palace. When a Ming emperor died, a concourse was built to be used only for the funeral processions leading to the hills, with stone beasts and figures of warriors lining the path. The Sacred Way is about six and a half kilometres (four miles) long.

Peking Man

Zhoukoudian is a World Heritage site about 50 kilometres southwest of the city at Dragon Bone Hill, where on the 2nd December 1929 a skullcap was discovered that provided evidence of human life between 700,000 and 200,000 years before. Further discoveries led to what is now called Peking Man which was very similar to modern man except that the skull has a low forehead with an eyebrow that sticks out and large teeth which do not overlap. Close to the Peking Man three other adult skulls, now called Upper Cave Men, were found and were estimated to be about 18,000 years old.

Summer Palace

Located at Xiyuan in Haidian District and 15 kilometres from Beijing, the Summer Palace is a classical Chinese garden, established in the Jin Dynasty (1115 to 1234) and covers 294 hectares most of which is water. The Summer Palace contains pavilions, towers, bridges, and divides into a court area, front hill area, lake area, rear hill and the back lake.

The front hill is where the Gate of Dispelling Clouds, Hall of Dispelling Clouds, Hall of Moral Glory and the Tower of Buddhist Incense are found. The Garden of Harmonious Interest is found in the rear hill area. Views of the lake can be seen from the front lake area where there is the Seventeen-Arch Bridge and on the west side is the Jade-Belt Bridge.

The main entry point is the Hall of Benevolent Longevity. Close by is the Hall of Jade Ripples and the Hall for Cultivating Happiness and Longevity. Located at Haidian district. Phone 6288 1144.

Tiananmen Square

The largest central square (440,000 square metres) in the world holds a million people and marks the centre of Beijing. As part of the square are the Great Hall of the People, the Monument to the People's Martyrs, Memorial Hall of Chairman Mao Zedong and Tiananmen Tower. Tiananmen Square is the front door of the Forbidden City and was used to declare the next emperor. The guard of honour raises the Chinese flag every morning and is a popular visitor attraction.

The Gate of Heavenly Peace (phone 6309 5718) to the north of the square leads towards the Forbidden City. The inscription on the left says “Long live the People's Republic of China” and the one on the right, “Long Live the Unity of the People of the World”. Good views of the square can be had from the top of the Gate.

The granite Monument to the People's Heroes in the centre of the square was built in 1952 and has the words “The People's Heroes are Immortal” as written by Chairman Mao on the monument.

On the western side of the square is the Great Hall of the People (phone 6608 1188) built in 1959 consisting of the Central Hall, the Great Auditorium and Banqueting Hall.

On the eastern side of the square is the China National Museum.

Chairman Mao's Mausoleum (phone 6513 2277) is at the south side of Tiananmen Square and opened in 1977. The memorial has three halls and the Hall of Reverence is where Chairman Mao's body lies in a coffin. In the centre of the north hall is a statue of Chairman Mao made of white marble. On the wall of the south hall is a poem written by Mao presented in gold and hand-written by Guo Moruo, the calligrapher. Located at 11 Qianmen Dajie at the southern end of Tiananmen Square.

Beihai Park

Beihai Park was the royal garden of the Jin, Yuan, Ming and Qing dynasties with a lake and paddleboats that can be rented. Beihai Park was originally home to a palace constructed by Kublai Khan in the 13th Century. All that remains is the enormous green jade jar used for his wine storage, now found in the Round City. Jade Isle is across the bridge from the Round City and full of lotus flowers in the summer. At the foot of the hill is Yong’an Temple and at the top is the White Dagoba erected in 1651 in honour of the Dalai Lama. Around the Jade Isle is the Painted Gallery verandah. Near where the boats dock is the Hall of Rippling Waters and the well known Fangshan Restaurant. The north side of the Beihai is reached by boat form the Five Dragon Pavillion. Located at 1 Wenjin Street, Xicheng District. Phone 6403 1102.

Coal Hill

In central Beijing stands Coal Hill, immediately to the north of the Forbidden City and in the Xicheng District. Originally built in the Yongle era of the Ming Dynasty from the dirt excavated from the moats of the Imperial Palace and canals, this 45 metre high artificial hill was an imperial garden known as Jingshan Park. Chongzhen, the last emperor of the Ming Dynasty is said to have committed suicide there by hanging himself in 1644. Coal Hill is the site of the Ten Thousand Springs Pavillion. Located at 1 Wenjin Street, Xicheng District. Phone 6404 4071.

Ditan Park

If you wish to experience some local culture, Ditan Park and the Temple of the Earth holds a traditional temple fair in spring at which you can see folk dancing and songs performed. The festival includes the sale of various arts and crafts and is a popular place to practice tai ji quan, or shadow boxing. Originally built in 1520 as a sacrificial altar to the earth god, the two-story worship terrace was off limits to ordinary citizens until 1911. Now an urban park with an ice arena and other attractions including a merry-go-round and electronic games. The closest train stations are An Ding Men or Yong He Gong. A2 Andingmenwai Avenue, Dongcheng District. Phone 6421 4657.

Liuyin Park

Containing 17 hectares (seven of those being water), Liuyin Park is situated to the west of Andingmen Waidajie. Built to resemble the Chinese countryside, and possibly the only park in Beijing showing rural scenery, it holds thatched pavilions, willow trees, bamboo, lotus flowers and fruit trees. The centre of the lake contains an island on which wild ducks nest and birdlife is abundant. Squirrels, magpies and nightingales are also a regular attraction. There is tea garden on the island. Liuyin Park can easily be reached from Andingmen subway station (a 10 minute walk), or by using bus numbers 108 or 104 to Jiangzhaikou station. Jiangzhaikou, Andingmenwai, Dongcheng District. Phone 8413 1357.

Longtanhu Park

Also known as Dragon Pool Park, Longtanhu Park was opened in 1952 and is spread over almost half a square kilometre of land, nearly one third of which is taken up by the Dragon Pool Lake. The well landscaped gardens and lake shores provide a sense of tranquility to the visitor, with its footbridges and carved dragons, together with open spaces, flowers and trees. It contains the Dragon Gate, the Flying Dragon Pavilion, the Green Dragon Bridge, badminton courts, roller skating and Beijing's reputedly tallest climbing wall. 8 Longtanhu Lu, Chongwen District. Phone 6714 4336.

Qingnianhu Park

Have fun with all of the family at this aquatic park. Containing a huge twin pool area, manned by lifeguards and with first aid equipment at the ready, the park has 11 water slides and various kiddies' recreational facilities including bumper cars and paddle boats. It also contains a split-level driving range for the golfers. Andingmenwai Dajie, Dongcheng District. Phone: 8413 2757

Ritan Park

Located in Beijing’s central business district, north of Yongangli and Jianguomen subway stations, is Ritan Park and the Temple of the Sun. Dating back to the 16th century, the emperor made sacrificial offerings to his sun god on the altar. Today though, it is a beautiful green space containing facilities for children such as trampolines, a merry-go-round, fishing pond, mini golf and also various food outlets and bars for the adults. Ritan Park, 6 Ritan Beilu, Chaoyang. Phone 8561 6301.

Tiantan Park

Tiantan is a pleasant park to walk around and had rose garden. It is more than just a park as it contains the Temple of Heaven and Hall of Prayer for Good Harvest. Amongst Beijing's finest buildings, the Hall is 38 metres high and almost 30 metres in diameter and was built without the use of a single nail. Located a good 25 minute walk from the Chongwenmen subway station, it is probably best to take a cab to get there. Yongdingmen Dajie, Chongwen District. Phone 6702 8866.

Tuanjiehu Park

Inside the park is a water park with a beach and wave pool together with a roller skating park. Located at 16 Tuanjiehu Nanli, Chaoyang District. Phone 8597 3603.

Yuyuantan Park

Yuyuantan Park is a great place to take children in Beijing. Centred around a lake, it has an aquatic park, lots of child-friendly entertainment and you can hire bicycles there. In April each year, Yuyuantan Park is host to a cherry blossom festival showcasing its beautiful cherry and magnolia blossoms. Its 136 hectares contain over 2,000 different types of trees. Located west of Tiananmen Square at the southern end of Sanlihe Road, China’s CCTV Tower stands at the east gate of the park. A further 200 metres to the south of the park is the China Millennium Monument. Parking is not available, so it’s best to get there by bus, taxi or subway. When you're ready to leave, you can catch a boat along the canal to the Summer Palace from close to the park's south gate. Xisanhuan Road (near CCTV Tower), Haidian District. Phone 8865 3804/6.

Zizhuyuan Park

Explore the canals and lakes by boat or ice chair. This park has plenty of bamboo. Located at 45 Baishiqiao Lu, Haidian District. Phone 6842 5851.

Zhongshan Park

A formal park with a Sun Yat-sen statue, bamboo groves and covered walkways. Boats and iced chairs can be rented to travel along the Forbidden City’s moat. Located at the west of Tiananmen Gate. Phone 6605 5431.

Acrobatics

In China they say that every minute an acrobat spends on stage requires ten years of training. Indeed, Beijing acrobatics shows, featuring astonishingly limber performers practicing feats of strength, balance and skill, are a tremendous sight to behold. Though the origins of the performance art are unknown, many believe that acrobatics developed from martial arts exhibitions and date back as early as the Neolithic period. There are several famous Beijing acrobatics theatres, including:

- Chaoyang Theatre
  36 East Third Ring Road, Chaoyang District. Phone 6507 2421.

- Tianqiao Acrobatics Theatre
  East Beiwei Road, Xuanwu District. Phone 6303 7449.

- Wansheng Juchang
  North Beiwei Lu, Near Qianmen Dajie. Phone 6303 7449.

Kung Fu

The most famous Beijing Kung Fu show is called The Legend of Kung Fu. It tells the story of a young boy who dreams of becoming a master of Kung Fu. Featuring traditional Kung Fu and acrobatics mixed with modern dance, the production is one of the most popular night shows in Beijing. Though the show itself has no dialog, narration is given in both English and Chinese to help the audience follow the story. Purchasing tickets in advance is advised. Theatres located at:

- Chaoyang Culture Centre
  17 Jintaili, Xiaozhuang. Phone 8599 0393.

- The Red Theatre
  Worker's Cultural Palace, 44 Xingfu Street, Chongwen District. Phone 6714 2473.

Peking Opera

Peking Opera is a traditional theatre form that combines singing, dialog, dance, music, acrobatics and elaborate costumes. Traditional instruments such as the two stringed fiddles, lutes, drums and gongs are used. It was performed in the late 18th century but became popular in the 19th century, especially during the Qing Dynasty. While the popularity of Beijing Opera has waned in recent years, despite attempts to modernise it with contemporary storylines, it is still considered a pinnacle in Chinese culture.

The story is normally a myth or historical event. There are over 1,400 storylines that a traditional Beijing Opera can depict, though recently some new plays and adaptations have emerged. Most of the stories are based around Chinese history and folklore. The Beijing Opera uses a special dialect of Chinese that can be very difficult to understand. Fortunately, many of the most popular theatres now offer subtitles in both English and standard Mandarin.

There are four main roles in every Beijing Opera. The Sheng, or main role, is a male character who typically sings in a very high voice. The Jing is a supporting male role, always depicted with a painted face and characterised by a strong voice and forceful body movements. The third male role is the Chou, or clown, which is also a painted face character and has a close relationship to the opera's percussion accompaniment. The final character type is the Dan, or female, role.

The stage scenery of a Beijing Opera is typically very sparse. Instead, the focus of the story falls upon the actors, who narrate events with highly stylised and symbolic movements that are timed precisely with accompanying music.

Peking opera can be enjoyed in several places with daily shows. The most popular Beijing Opera theatres are at:

- Changan Grand Hall
  Changan Building, 7 Jiangguomennei Dajie. Phone 6510 1309.

- Li Yuan Theatre

Bars

The Beijing bar scene is constantly spreading and expanding but, at the moment, the majority of the action is still confined to two main areas. The good thing about this is that it is very easy to find everything and once you are in a neighbourhood it is very easy to walk from place to place.

The first area in Beijing to develop a true bar scene was Sanlitun, named for a street near the embassy neighbourhoods of Chaoyang District. A long time favourite with foreigners, there is a constant rotation of new bars featuring a wide range of themes in Sanlitun. Despite this rotation, there are consistently a lot of people having a great, sometimes rowdy, time. Bars open until late.

The other major cluster of bars can be found around Houhai Lake. The Houhai Lake bar area experienced a surge of development in 2003 and hasn't stopped since. Now there are a good number of bars, all offering a similar atmosphere, on both sides of the lake. These tend to be low key affairs and nearly all of them offer seating on the water. This is a great place to have a quiet drink, enjoy the water and relax.

There is a third area, also overlooking Houhai Lake, along the street Houhai Nanyan. This row of bars and restaurants tend to be a bit more upscale, specialising in fine food and fancy cocktails. This is certainly the place to go if you are trying to impress a date.

Massage and Spas
There are many options available for massage in Beijing. The foot bath massage is Beijing's specialty. For this, the feet are soaked in a warm bath infused with special minerals and herbs. The masseuse then rubs the feet, using principles of reflexology. In this way, the masseuse is able to relax the entire body by only touching the feet.

Traditionally in China, privacy and etiquette dictated that a masseuse must be blind. This treatment from a blind masseuse can still be found in several places in Beijing.

Pampering oneself has caught on in Beijing. As a result many other forms of massage are also available including full body massage, traditional ear massage and full spa treatments.

Shopping
Beijing has excellent shopping opportunities from very upmarket malls to busy markets with excellent bargains.

For a world-class shopping spree, Beijing is definitely the place to be. You can start at the malls of Oriental Plaza, where you will find a wide selection of diamonds, good food, clothes, DVDs and music CDs. There are also several large malls in Xidan near Tiananmen Square that offer a variety of goods. The city’s biggest mall can be found near Yuanda Bridge, the Golden Resources Shopping Mall, which is Asia’s second largest mall.

For high-end shops and expensive products, tourists will thoroughly enjoy the shops at Wangfujing or at the China World Trade Centre. Meanwhile, technology buffs will feel like they found heaven at the electronic malls at Zhong Guan Cun, which is considered the Silicon Valley of China. The most popular malls here are Hilon and Dinghao. The best stores for outdoor gear in China can be found at Building 4 in Nancun, Madian and at Jinzhiqiao Dasha in the Chaoyang District.

If you’re hunting for antiques, head to Liulichang for their many exquisite antique offerings, including furniture, handicrafts, Chinese paintings, old books and the like. Gu Wan Cheng on the Third Ring Road also has a broad range of upmarket antiques.

Many hotel shops also offer a lot of Chinese specialty items. For instance, the Emperor shop at Kempinski Hotel has excellent porcelain, silk clothing, tea items and table settings. The Torana Gallery at the same hotel offers an impressive array of silk and Tibetan carpets.

Markets

Beijing's markets are a great place for bargain hunters. If you want to get the best buys available, there is one rule to bear in mind: you have to haggle. Local vendors are notorious for jacking up their prices when dealing with foreign tourists, so haggling is expected. Haggling can save you 15% or more on what you pay.

One of the biggest markets in town is in Xidan, near Tiananmen Square, right beside some huge malls. It is a great venue for a wide variety of items. Jianguomen Wai Dajie is a building also near Tiananmen Square that sells goods exclusively for foreign tourists. These include clothes, jewellery, luggage, bags, make-up, electronics, sporting goods and artwork amongst other things.

Beijing has a host of markets that specialise in particular products. There are several clothing markets, but you will find two of the most popular ones at Xizhi Men and at Gongti Beilu, known as the SanLiTun YaShou Clothing Market. There are also several men's tailoring shops in these markets where you can order a custom-made suit and get it within 24 hours. Apart from clothes, the Gongti Beilu market also has great bargains on china, bed and consumer electronics.

The Silk Market or "Silk Street" is on East Xiushui Street while the state-run silk market can be found at Hong Qiao near the Temple of Heaven.

If you're looking for a flea market, you'll find the biggest one in China at Pan Jia Yuan at the eastern portion of Third Ring Road, near Pan Jia Yuan Bridge. There you will find antiques, jade, porcelain, carved stone, furniture, paintings, maps and many other items.

Beijing Olympics

Introduction
Mayor Wang Qishan accepted the Olympic flag from the president of the Athens Olympic Games in August 2004. Beijing is investing heavily to ensure an excellent event. The Beijing Olympic Games will have three principles: "Green Olympics", "High Tech Olympics" and "People's Olympics".

Known officially as the "Games of the XXIX Olympiad", the Beijing Olympics is expected to be one of the greatest sports spectacles in history, involving 205 countries and about 10,500 athletes competing in 28 sports and 302 events. It will be held from 8th to 24th August in Beijing in the People's Republic of China. The famed Beijing National Stadium will host the opening ceremonies which commence at 08.08.08 pm CST on 8th August 2008.

Former IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch has said that he expects the Beijing Olympics to be "the best in Olympic history."

The centre of the Beijing Olympics will be the Olympic Green between the North Third and Fourth Ring Roads, on a direct axis to the Forbidden City. At the centre of the Olympic Green is the National Stadium, the Aquatic Centre and Digital Beijing, a museum and command centre for the 2008 Olympics.

Calendar of Events
The football (soccer) competitions will begin two days prior to the official opening, on 6th August. Most of the other events will begin on 9th August, including archery, badminton, basketball, boxing, cycling, equestrian, fencing, gymnastics, handball, judo, rowing, sailing, shooting, swimming, volleyball, water polo and weightlifting.

Diving, field hockey, swimming and tennis will begin on 10th August, whilst canoeing starts on 11th August. Softball and wrestling commence on 12th August, baseball and table tennis on 13th August, athletics on 15th August, triathlon and synchronised swimming on 18th August and the modern pentathlon on 21st August.

The events with the most gold medals at stake are athletics with 47, swimming with 34, cycling and wrestling with 18 each, canoeing with 16, shooting and weightlifting with 15 each and judo and rowing with 14 each.

Public Transport
Beijing’s subway system has undergone a major expansion to more than double its capacity in preparation for the Olympic Games. Preparations include the addition of seven lines and over 80 new stations to the existing four lines and 64 stations.

The additional lines include a station that links the Beijing Capital International Airport directly to several Olympic Games venues. Moreover, Beijing has added 11 new trains to the airport to assist with people movement during the Olympic Games. These new trains are operational from June 2008.

Beijing has also outfitted all Metro cars plying the city with video screens to show constant updates on the Olympic Games.

The city has designated 38 public transit routes linking directly to various Olympic Games venues. As many as 2,500 large buses and 4,500 minibuses will be manned by 8,000 drivers to ply these routes for the duration of the Beijing Olympics.

Foreign visitors should note that smoking is banned in virtually all corners of the Beijing transport system. Violators will be fined between US$13 to US$26.

Tickets
The Beijing Olympic Organising Committee has allocated more than seven million tickets for the competitions as well as for the opening and closing ceremonies. About 75% of all tickets are allotted for domestic sales and are sold at relatively low prices to encourage maximum attendance among the Chinese.

International tickets can be purchased through each country's National Olympic Committee. Tickets went on sale as early as 14th April, 2007.

Venues
The Beijing Olympics will have 37 competition venues in all, 31 in Beijing and six venues just outside the city and 59 training centres.

The Beijing Olympic events will take place at the following venues:

Archery will take place at the Olympic Green Archery Field.

Athletics and Football will be held at the National Stadium in the Olympic Green.

Badminton and Rhythmic Gymnastics will take place at the Beijing University of Technology Gymnasium.

Baseball will take place in Wukesong Baseball Field in the Western Community Area.

Basketball will take place at the Wukesong Indoor Stadium in the Western Community Area.

Beach Volleyball will take place at the Chaoyang Park Beach Volleyball Ground.

BMX will take place at the Bicycle Motor Crossing (BMX field) in the Western Community Area.

Boxing will take place at the Workers' Indoor Stadium.
Cycling will take place at the Laoshan Velodrome and Mountain Biking at Laoshan mountain bike track in the Western Community Area.

Fencing will take place at the Fencing Hall at the Olympic Green.

Football will take place at the Olympics Sports Stadium at the Olympic Green and at the Workers Stadium.

Handball will take place at the Olympic Sports Centre Gymnasium at the Olympic Green.

Hockey will take place at the Olympic Green Hockey Field.

Judo and Taekwondo will take place at the University of Science and Technology Beijing Gymnasium.

Rowing, Canoeing and Kayaking will take place at the Shunyi Olympic Rowing Park in the North Scenic Area.

Shooting will take place at the Beijing Shooting Range in the Western Community Area.

Softball will take place in Fengtai Softball Field in the Western Community Area.

Swimming, Diving Water Polo and Synchronised Swimming will take place at the National Aquatics Centre at the Olympic Green.

Table Tennis will take place at the Peking University Gymnasium.

Tennis will take place at the Olympic Green Tennis Centre.

Trampoline, Artistic Gymnastics and Handball will be held at the National Indoor Stadium at the Olympic Green.

Volleyball will take place at the Beijing Institute of Technology Gymnasium and the Capital Indoor Stadium.

Weightlifting will take place at the Beijing University of Aeronautics and Astronautics Gymnasium.

Wrestling will take place at the China Agricultural University Gymnasium.

The six main venues are as follows:

Beijing National Stadium

The National Stadium has been nicknamed the "Bird's Nest" because its architectural design resembles a steel bird’s nest. Aside from the opening and closing ceremonies, the Beijing National Stadium will also host the track and field competitions.

The stadium is 69.2 metres tall, 330 metres long and 220 metres wide. It has a seating capacity of 100,000. The cost of construction cost was about US$423 million.

Designed as the centrepiece of the Beijing Olympics, the stadium is the result of a worldwide competition among leading architectural firms. Herzog & de Meuron Architekten AG, based in Switzerland, won the rights to design the stadium, in collaboration with the China Architecture Design & Research Group. Its design included plans for a giant retractable roof, but this was later scrapped for safety and economic reasons.

Beijing National Indoor Stadium

This multi-functional venue, located at Beijing's Olympic Green, will be the site of the artistic gymnastics, trampoline, and handball competitions. It can house 19,000 spectators.

The Beijing National Indoor Stadium had a 'dry run’ in November 2007 when it hosted a national artistic gymnastics event and received rave reviews.

After the Olympics, the stadium is envisioned to be an exercise centre for the locals as well as a venue for cultural and entertainment events.

Beijing National Aquatics Centre

Located right beside the Beijing National Stadium, this venue is the site of the swimming, diving and synchronised swimming competitions. It is fondly called the "Water Cube.” It can accommodate 17,000 spectators.

The Beijing National Aquatics Centre is made mostly out of ETFE (Ethylene tetrafluoroethylene), which is similar to plastic but is durable and more susceptible to light and heat penetration. This design will bring about 30% savings in energy cost.

Considered as the biggest ETFE structure in the world, the Beijing National Aquatics Centre has already won two prestigious awards, the Venice Biennale Award for most accomplished work (Atmosphere section) in 2004 and the Popular Science Award for Best of What's New in Engineering in 2006.

Olympic Green Convention Centre

This sparkling new convention centre will host the fencing, shooting and fencing disciplines of the modern pentathlon. Spanning approximately 270,000 square metres, the centre will also serve as the Main Press Centre and Broadcast Centre for international media.

After the Olympics, this top-flight convention centre will be used for major conventions and exhibitions.
Olympic Green

This is Beijing's Olympic Park and the venue of several competition sites, including the Beijing National Stadium, Beijing National Aquatics Centre, Beijing National Indoor Stadium, Olympic Green Convention Centre, Olympic Green Hockey Field, Olympic Green Archery Field, Olympic Green Tennis Centre and the Olympic Village.

Local authorities have ensured that the Olympic Green is easily accessible to spectators, both locals and international sports fans alike.

Beijing Wukesong Culture and Sports Centre

This indoor arena will be the venue of two popular sports events, the basketball and baseball competitions. The basketball area has a seating capacity of 18,000 whilst the baseball field can accommodate 15,000 spectators.

In March 2007, the baseball field was the venue for the "MLB China Series" featuring two teams from the USA's Major League Baseball, the San Diego Padres and Los Angeles Dodgers. It was the first time that two MLB teams played in China.
